

Have You Ever Had Such A Friend ?

- He did not talk very much.
 - He was always thoughtful.
 - He would not utter bad words.
 - He would not quarrel with anyone.
 - He was always sober.
 - He would not be busy with unnecessary things.
 - He would never get angry for worldly affairs.
 - He would not talk unnecessarily.
 - He would not drive a person who hoped to despair.
 - He would not search for anyone's fault.
 - He would walk solemnly and calmly.
 - His silence was longer than his speech.
 - He would not accept false praise.
 - His pardoning was natural; he would not take revenge.
 - He would keep quiet about things that he did not like.
 - He would virtually encompass the people around him when he talked.
 - He would not be rude or shout when there was trouble.
 - He would not turn his face away when he talked to someone.
 - He would wear plain clothes and disliked show-off.
 - He would never get angry and take revenge for personal affairs.
 - He would walk behind the people who accompanied him.

When he spoke, he would use neither more nor fewer words than necessary.

He would not sit in a privileged place in an assembly.

He was not an ordinary person but he lived like ordinary people.

He would never turn down a man who asked for help.

He would not say anything bad about anyone.

He was always in a somewhat sad mood but he always smiled.

He never uttered a bad word, even involuntarily.

His words were as sweet and clear as shining pearls.

He would eat with the poor; it was not possible to distinguish him from them.

He would listen to the last person to speak as was attentively as the first person to speak.

He would not only forgive his enemies but also esteem and value them.

He would never blame anyone in their presence or absence.

When he walked, he would lift his foot from the ground dynamically and he would not swing.

He would take wide steps and lean forward as if descending from a high place.

He would say to his friends,

“Be like a stranger or a traveler in the world.”

When he left home in the morning, he would say,

“O Lord! I take refuge in You from deviating and being forced to deviate from the right path, deceiving and being deceived, wronging and being wronged, disrespecting and being disrespected.”

HE IS THE PROPHET MUHAMMAD (PBUH)
